Postdoctoral Fellow Opening:

The Human Flourishing Program at the Institute for Quantitative Social Science at Harvard University is seeking applications for a Post-doctoral Fellow to work on research related to the relationship between religion and health. The Human Flourishing Program seeks to carry out research and teaching to bridge the empirical social sciences with the humanities on topics related to human flourishing. The Post-doctoral Fellow will assist in the analysis of data from large cohort studies with measures of religion, spirituality and health, and also carry out an independent program of empirical research on well-being. Candidates should have a PhD in the biomedical or social sciences. Facility with data analysis is a necessity. Strong preference will be given to candidates with experience in public health. Given the interdisciplinary nature of the program, preference will also be given to those candidates who also have familiarity with and/or substantial coursework in philosophy and theology.

Interested candidates should send their cv to Bonnie O’Brien bobrien@iq.harvard.edu no later than July 3rd.
